Build a SCHOLAR!

The Rare Books and Manuscripts Reading Room at the University of Florida Library is a magnet for historians, writers, film makers, and teachers interested in Florida’s history. Every semester researchers come from across the campus, across the state, and across the country to carry out work in the P.K. Yonge Library of Florida History, the largest collection of Floridiana – books, documents and maps – to be found anywhere.

Help create a living legacy by contributing to the Stewards’ initiatives on research. Support a travel stipend program, such as the Cecilia L. Johnson Competition in Florida History, which makes funds available at the national level for scholars who want to work in our Florida history collections.

Or help us in our efforts to create research assistantships for young scholars at the University of Florida. Each year, the Stewards’ Endowment Program will support a talented graduate student from liberal arts and sciences or museum studies and provide two semesters of training in the care and handling of rare materials. Help create the scholars and archivists of tomorrow! Talk to us about supporting the Endowment for Graduate Assistantships.

Help us put our collections in public view! The Florida history collections are already active in producing educational materials online, creating K-12 classroom materials on Florida history, and promoting talks and seminars about the state’s heritage. As a Steward you can help us through your support of traveling exhibits, web sites, and outreach to the community. Your contribution can go a long way to increasing public awareness and appreciation for the state’s rich past.

Expand PUBLIC PROGRAMMING!

A grant from the St. Augustine Foundation at Flagler College made possible this online index to the 50,000+ colonial records of Spanish East Florida for the years 1784-1821. Now researchers can quickly and easily search the records for names, places, words, and phrases.
